

the Bay Area Mercantile exchange

I am interested in forming a Mercantile exchange for all small cap, medium cap and startup companies in the San Francisco bay area. Where anyone from mom and pop delis textile manufacturers, donut shops, to banks and industrial manufacturers can have a portion of their company listed to be publicly traded. The region should encompass a 200 mile radius from market street which would include Monterey, San Jose, sf, Oakland, and reach up past Napa valley and Humboldt county. With this I've devised to include a system of stable coin to the BAMEX which will post daily an undetermined as of now number of times between 4 or a real time moving average by the second. This is a basic framework of the economic booster which would help build new localized non federal treasuries from global transaction fees in stable coin add Mercantile transaction fees, the treasuries would contain upwards of hundreds of billions of dollars in precious metals within the first decade alone.

The system being devised would contain various fee levels being inner region discounted fees, state fee amounts, country wide transaction fee rates and global rates for using the stable coin associated with this or any regions new Mercantile exchange and stable coin model. Along with trading the shares of the companies for profit and loss the stable coin would also be tradable as it's own Forex type currency which intrigued investors, gamblers and the global financial annalists and investment specialty institutions. The treasuries themselves would be run by the people of the bay area or whichever region utilizes this business model as opposed to a federal system of confusion and too many chefs from outside regions and interests. With this new system the s.e.c. and the centurion foundation do not need to be included in any decision making, law making or enforcement thereof.
